Programming and systems software for the ICT 1300 series.

By the early 1960s computer manufacturers were beginning to provide significant amounts of systems software for their products. The systems software covered both compilers and applications packages, but operating systems were still rather primitive by modern standards.

No relevant programming manuals for the BTM 1300 series computers have thus far been studied. There is a need for further research in this area.